Ketrachloridos (KCH) is used in combination with other herbicides. It is a sulfonylurea herbicide that is highly selective and acts as an activator of an acetohydroxyacid synthase enzyme. It is applied pre-emergence to foliage to protect cereal crops against grasshoppers. It was introduced for broadleaf weeds in 1997 and for grasses in 2000. In the United States, it is used in corn, soybeans, and cotton. In countries outside the United States, it is used primarily in wheat and rice in areas that are infested with pests that are sensitive to it. Ketrachloridos is moderately persistent in soil and persists for about three weeks in water with a half-life of 11 days. It is not absorbed well by vegetables. Ecotoxicological studies in aquatic organisms indicate that it has no significant effects on metazoan

Sunday, 13 September 2009 You know what this post is about... right? I might be causing some confusion in the reaction of readers by posting this so quickly. Dear readers, I'm writing to tell you that I've become unemployed since writing last. I've always been employed, even when I'm not doing this blog. I got myself an ongoing contract in a technology company, the usual unglamorous, sensible work. I looked a bit like an expert in the words I used for my work. I helped to produce a report on new technologies and their use in contemporary businesses and I also help people to make sense of ICT systems for themselves. You'd think that would be a great plan as one of the core jobs... Unfortunately, the company has changed their entire strategic direction and that report no longer forms part of their business strategy. I am the author of my own unemployment. I won't be working for this company for any length of time now and have to find something new. I am going to take f678ea9f9e
